Visit decision is a very crucial point to be considered in tourism industry, where numbers of tourist visit becomes a factor that supports sustainability of a destination. DKI Jakarta is an urban tourism destination and a one stop destination that strives to maintain and improve tourist decision by improving their motivation to visit. This study examines the influence of tourist motivation towards visit decision through city break features in DKI Jakarta. The independent variable in this study is tourist motivation (X), which consists of two dimensions; push factors and pull factors. The moderating variable in this study is city break features (M). The dependent variable in this study is visit decision (Y). This study employed quantitative approach and primary data were obtained from responses given by respondents. Questionnaire was developed and distributed to a number of 100 Malaysian city breaker in DKI Jakarta. For data analysis technique and hypothesis test, this research employed Moderated Regression Analysis (MRA). Findings showed that the variable of tourists' motivation contributed a significant influence on visit decision moderated by city break features, both simultaneously and partially. Dimension with stronger influence on visit decision is pull factors, while dimension with lower influence is push factors. Therefore, this study has reinforced the premises put forward by the previous research which statedthere is a significant influence between the variable of tourists' motivation and visit decision through city break features.
